

Baseball Spreads Positivity

By: Adam Cobb

Big Sport Big Smiles

- The average amount of people that attended an MLB baseball game was 30,023 in 2017.
- Wars couldn't even stop baseball because it was such a big moneymaker, and it gave hope to citizens when they needed it.
- It is a sport where nine men speedily click together, work hard, and share a desired result.
- Baseball has kept its stability through many ups and downs keeping high attendance from home and at the stadium

Why does Baseball matter?

Baseball matters to many different people for many different reasons. For me, baseball changes my everyday life. It is a commitment that makes me work hard, and it teaches me and many other kids important life lessons. For some people baseball is simply a great entertainment source. To others it is something that keeps them active.

4 Life Lessons Learned In Baseball

- Working as a team. It's not so much for baseball but to give you experience for further in life.
- Strong work ethic. This is also to experience you for farther into life.
- Dealing with pressure. This helps you learn to make decisions when put in the spotlight.
- Work with new people. It will help you learn to make new friends and feel comfortable doing so.

Does baseball have a positive impact?

I ran a survey of random people throughout the school the following is what I got from these...

80 percent said baseball had a positive impact on them.

52 percent of people I surveyed say that baseball impacts them everyday.

75 percent said they learn life lessons of baseball.

Closer In

I took a closer look with how baseball has a positive impact on Alex Hill, the left fielder for for Creekside's 7th grade baseball team.

Question:

1. Why do you like baseball?
2. How does it affect you?
3. What lessons have you learned?
4. How does it affect your everyday life?

Answer:

1. "I make new friends and stay active."
2. "It gives me something to do in my free time."
3. "Don't give up, and always keep going."
4. "It makes everyday more fun but takes away a lot of time."

Conclusion

All in all, baseball is a great way to spread positivity, learn life lessons, and many more. This sport is unstoppable and helps all ages around the world. It's impact is truly incredible and will never be forgotten. We not only have all these things but it just makes people want to go outside and have fun. With my data taken through the school I have found out that baseball heavily has an impact on Creekside. I can now prove that baseball spreads positivity.
